"Graham's Magazine for November." The publisher of this popular magazine is more than punctual in issuing it. A well bred man keeps an appointment exactly, neither anticipating the time nor lagging behind it a single moment, and so should respectable periodicals be true to their day—else their presence is likely to become tiresome when it should be welcome. But since the publishers of Christmas Annuals have set the fashion of issuing them on the Fourth of July, we presume that magazine publishers may be allowed to shew their enterprize also in the premature appearance of their peculiar works. The quality of this number of Graham—save the first engraving, of which the less said the better—is excellent. The first paper is by Joseph C. Neal,—a name which is a guaranty for its wit. Jack Spratte and Mrs. Brownstout are leading characters in the scenes which constitute what our editorial friend calls "A Piscatorial Episode." Mrs. Epes Sargent, Mrs. Stephens, Miss Charlotte Cushman, and other names of more and less note, figure in the list of contributors.

The Life of Hannah More, No. 5, is issued by the Harpers, and for sale by Carey & Hart. From the same publishers may be had the first number of Amos Kendall's Life, private, military and civil, of Andrew Jackson—well printed on good paper, to be completed in fifteen numbers.
